2017 Statewide January Winter Storms

An atmospheric river, a narrow corridor of concentrated moisture, will take aim at California this weekend with heavy precipitation, high snow levels and soils that are already saturated from recent storms. The brunt of the storm will occur 01/08/17, tapering off 01/09/17. Additional storms are possible 01/10/17 into the week ahead. The majority of the precipitation will fall as rain in the mountainous areas as snow levels rise above 8,000 feet.

Additional storms are possible Tuesday into the following weekend. Keep in mind that flooding will take several days to recede in some areas after the rain stops.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

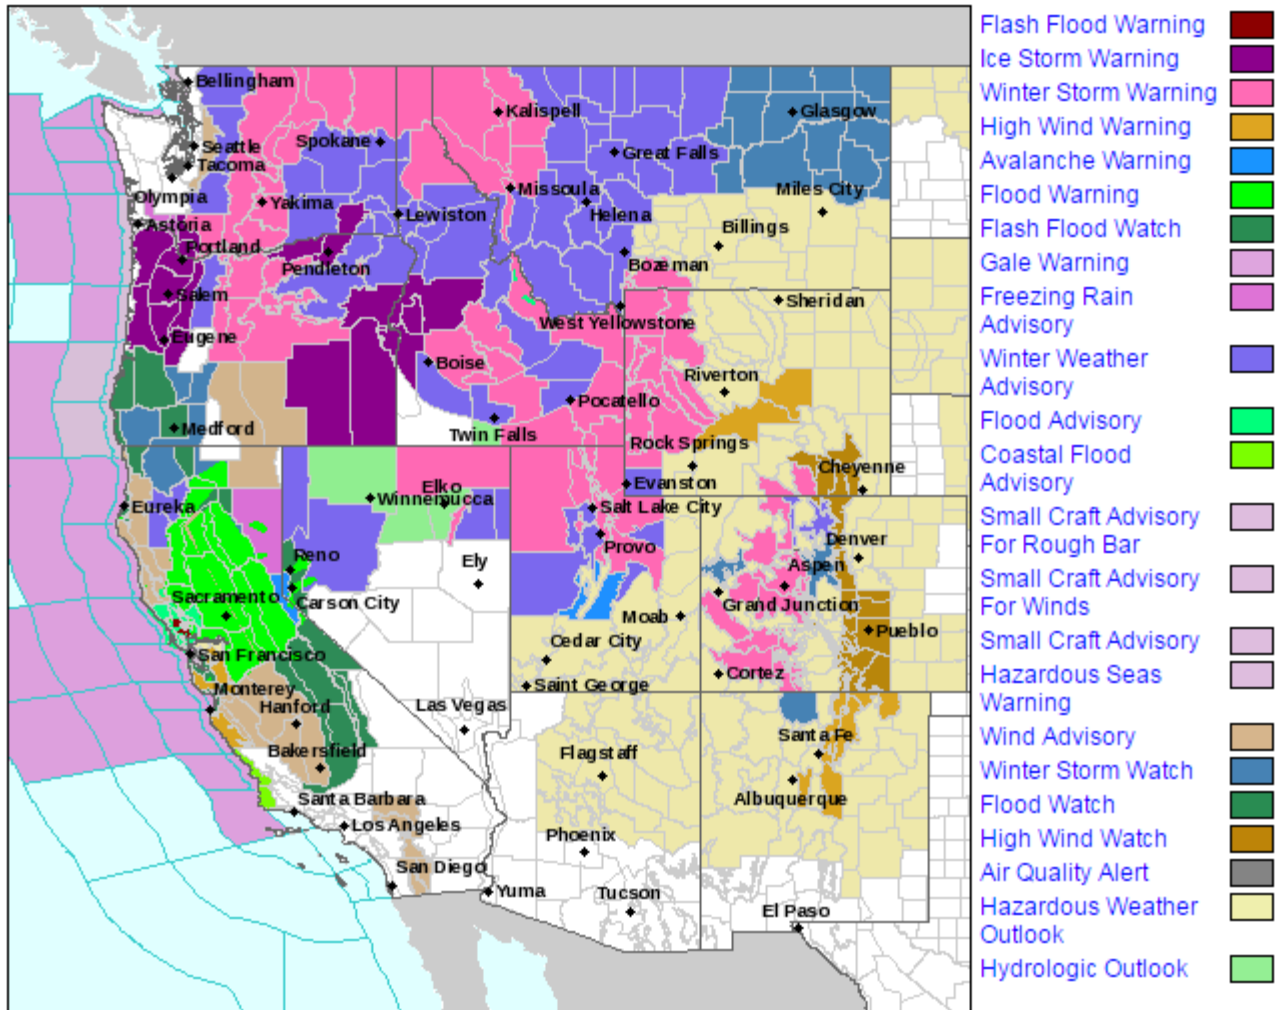

Heavy rain, gusty winds, and flooding are concerns for today. Flooding concerns continue Monday into Wednesday with very heavy mountain snow expected. Another weather system possible Thursday. Moderate to heavy precipitation has spread across interior Northern California early this morning as the relatively narrow plume is shifting northward across the region. Most Valley locations have already seen 0.75 to 1.50 inches of rainfall since the event began Saturday morning. The orographically-favored west slopes of the Sierra have received 2 to 4 inches of rain, with no sign of letting up. Winds have also steadily been ramping up this morning, with wind gusts of 20 to 30 mph being reported across the Valley.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Partly to mostly cloudy and dry for today. This evening into Monday a cold front will bring another round of rain to all areas. More rain on Tuesday afternoon moving from the northwest to southeast. This rain will last overnight into Wednesday morning. High temperatures will be below normal for the week. Overnight rain for the Central Coast was a big swing and miss for all three models upper ridge nosing up from the southeast pushed all the rain north into Monterey County. This will give everywhere a little time to rest in between storms. Skies will be partly to mostly cloudy as a little dry slot moves over the area embedded in the southwest flow aloft. Hgt are actually near 580 DM and this along with weak offshore flow and reduced cloud cover will allow max temps to climb into lower 70s for more than a few locations across the coasts and valleys.
